

Matthew McLaughlin

April 17, 2014

Section 4

Best Lyric: "Human"

The lyrics of "Human" by Christina Perri depict the faults and flaws of human nature as well as the inability of mankind to attain perfection. In this beautiful ballad, Perri communicates to the listener the limitations placed on his being, emphasizing the overwhelming struggles that leave humans hopeless, disheartened, and depressed. Ultimately, however, the main purpose of this song is to bring to life and enlighten people about the human condition so that they can better come to understand and be aware of their own imperfections as human beings, with the assumption that acceptance will follow suit. Of course, it is not easy to embrace those things that cause suffering and feelings of inadequacy; however, if people begin to cultivate acceptance in their lives, then they will ultimately approach life from a positive perspective and view, yielding harmony rather than distress. Nevertheless, even today people still fail to accept reality and the circumstances surrounding human existence, leading to chaos, disorder, and turmoil in places like North Korea, China, and even Syria. Fighting against the natural and inherent tendencies clearly only gives rise to a miserable and unhappy fight against the universe. The lyrics of this song are definitely poetic in the sense that they force people to become more aware and conscious of the reality that they live in. Instead of portraying life as a happy, joyous, and everlasting persistence, "Human" depicts an accurate version of reality, making it an impetus for change rather than an idle and stagnant diversion from authenticity. Ultimately, by causing people to become more cognizant, the song lyrics influence people towards the direction of maturity and a life approach that yields a positive, peaceful state of mind.